In psychology, identity is the qualities, beliefs, personality, looks and/or expressions that make a person (self-identity) or group (particular social category or social group). [citation needed] Categorizing identity can be positive or destructive. A psychological identity relates to self-image (one's mental model of oneself), self-esteem, and individuality.

Humanity deserves digital identity that is permanent, portable, private and completely secure; in other words: self-sovereign. Shortcomings in the internet's original design made this impossible, at a cost of trillions each year. Today, the invention of distributed ledger technology makes self-sovereign identity a possibility for the first time.

Setting boundaries is an important part of establishing one's identity, as well as being crucial for one's mental health and well-being. There are different types of boundaries, from physical boundaries to emotional boundaries, and there are also different levels of boundaries, from loose to rigid, with healthy boundaries falling somewhere in between.
